The fine city of Norwich

Norwich is a “fine city” according to the signs that welcomes you as you arrives on the city outskirts. There is interesting city walks through the old, narrow streets and by the river, and there is many medieval buildings. Boat trips regularly leaves the city to join the River Yare into the famous Norfolk Broads. These are man-made waterways that covers much of east Norfolk to the coast.

Thousands of visitors comes to Norwich every year. They enjoys exploring the city, which have many old buildings, some of which dates back hundreds of years. The Castle stand on a mound and now serve as the region’s principal museum, with a variety of displays.

The most famous building, however, are the cathedral, which lie off an attractive street, Tombland. The spire of the cathedral dominate the city: only the city of Salisbury have a higher spire.
