

Travelling in the rush hour - answers

The nouns in this text have been underlined:

I take the bus to the station every morning. I absolutely hate it - there's always a crowd at the stop (I can't call it a queue!). Even in the rush hour* there can be a huge gap between the buses so that when one does come the driver doesn't stop because it's full! When a bus does stop, I really have a struggle to get on because everybody tries to get on at the same time. Of course there is never an empty seat! At least it's a short ride. Then there's the train to deal with! Same problem - no seats. People tread on my feet, stick their elbows into my ribs and an apology is rare.

* Rush hour is a compound noun, where 2 words go together to make one noun.
