

GAZ: Oh, I think... Oh, I'm in luck. Yeah. Yeah, I got a big one.

NARRATOR: Before making their way to the checkpoint, Yin and Gaz are paying for last night's accommodation...

GAZ: Yay! Gold!

NARRATOR: ...digging lotus roots...

GAZ: Our host has just turned up in his jeans and gone straight in.

NARRATOR: ...central to Chinese cuisine. Their host, Mr. Lou, will sell this morning's harvest at the local market.

MR LOU: Oh!

GAZ: Woah! That's a - woah! Look at the size of that one. That's a good one.

YIN: This is what I think of rural China. Picturesque scenery, agriculture.

GAZ: Whoops. Careful, careful.

YIN: I keep falling over. Whoops-a-daisy! Rural China is interspersed with industrial China, but then you get rewarded with views like this. You feel like such a small speck when you're surrounded by these magnificent mountains. The abundance of our labour. Ta da! We did all this.

GAZ: This.

YIN: This is the China that I wanted to see. Feel quite honoured to have experienced that and to have experienced it with them as well.

MR LOU: You're wonderful.

GAZ: Thank you, sir!